Dr. Britton D. Evans, the defense's expert, was called to the stand when court was resumed at 10:30 o'clock. He was questioned by Mr. Delmas:

If my sister is in any danger I will pack up and get back to Pittsburg." The district attorney then promised that nothing would happen to the witness, whereupon young Nesbit reconsidered his determination and sald he would remain.

LETTERS ADMIT THAW CRUEL

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.-District Attor ney Jerome has planned a sensational attack on the story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw when she again takes the stand. Armed with a score or more of letters which the former chorus girl wrote her mother, Mrs. Holman, before her marriage to Stanford White's slayer, he will endeavor to prove that the young Pittsburger did treat her cruelly, and that the affidavit she made to A. H. Hummel was not conjured in his mind.

These missives were turned over to the prosecutor by Mrs. Holman.

They were written by Evelyn on both sides of the Atlantic, and are said to severely denounce Thaw for what she termed his inhuman treatment of her.

Thaw Discouraged At Trial's Delay

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.-The sudden turn taken by his affairs today cast a gloom over Harry Thaw, and he was visibly discouraged when led back to the Tombs, following the recess. Before leaving he requested that his attorneys exert every effort to prevent a mistrial. and declared that he would cheerfully meet any expenditures made necessary to prevent a postponement of the case. Evelyn Thaw hastened to the Tombs, where she visited her husband and

By DOROTHY DIX.

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.—The Thaw trial is like the making of a wonderful mosaic. A little stone of evidence, red as blood, is brought from the Tenderloin. Another little stone of evidence, gray and apparently meaningless, is fetched from Pittsburg. Other bits are brought over seas from London, Paris or elsewhere.

His sorrow is for himself and his wife, and that which, being done, can never be undone. If his life blood could wash out the stain of Evelyn Nesbit's past he would give it to her as freely as he has given his money for her poverty and his name for her protection. Thaw attorneys.

This afternoon the one topic of discussion is the probability of a mistrial, which would probably mean the vain expenditure of more than a million dollars. It has been pretty well established that Thaw's defense will not fall far short of costing a million, and experienced attorneys say that the expense to the State of New York in the present trial approximates a quarter of a million. A mistrial would probably make the Thaw case the most expensive proceeding in American criminal court history.

Precedents can be found in New York State for the continuance of a murder trial with eleven jurors when the withdrawal of one has been made necessary by circumstances reflecting no discredit upon him. So keen is the interest on both sides in having the trial proceed with the present jury that it is not beyond the range of possibilities that the trial may continue with an eleven-man jury.

JEROME READS THAW'S WILL

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.- The first move planned by the lawyers for the defense for today's proceedings was to place in evidence the will of Thaw. Through it they will attempt to prove that the slayer of Stanford White lived in dread Sues Harry Thaw that he would meet his end at the hands of the architect and believed that his marriage to Evelyn Nesbit was his
